"I told them I'd be serving them and to just sit down, that I'd take care of them," Garst said. "They were so thankful, and it was just heartbreaking."

On Friday afternoon, Garst and Jones were joined by Jones' daughter, Jessica and Kay Ludwig, who are both Stow-Munroe Falls culinary students and are both ServSafe certified through working at the Six District Educational Compact's Joshua's Restaurant.

"I wanted to help, and I know I can help," Jessica said.

Jessica volunteered at Stow-Glen after working at Bellacino's starting at 5 a.m., while Kay was heading to her job working in food service at Danbury Senior Living immediately after volunteering at Stow-Glen.

For lunch, the team was preparing leftover pizza that had been donated the day before by Little Caesars in Stow, as well as fried chicken, jojo's, fruit and salad.

When they realized that the lettuce had browned, they informed Pribonic, who immediately texted Giant Eagle Stow senior store leader Michelle O'Brien. Within four minutes, O'Brien confirmed that she would provide two cases of bagged lettuce in time for dinner.

The certainty of meals, in the midst of so much chaos and uncertainty was welcomed by Sandra Whyde, who only moved in to Stow-Glen five weeks ago. She is planning to move into a Danbury facility on Aug. 14, but wants to move sooner.

Whyde ate lunch — served by the Joneses — with Don and Jackie Thissen, who have been at Stow-Glen for eight years and are moving to Hudson Meadows on Sunday. The Thissens had just recently set up an automatic payment for Stow-Glen and had their August rent deducted on July 27, the day before Stow-Glen announced it was closing.

They do not yet know if they will be reimbursed.

"Everyone likes where we're moving, but we loved it here," Jackie Thissen said. "We had a corner in the back with all the deer and the turkeys. We planted flowers, and of course we're not going to have that anymore. We're moving away from people we've known for a long time. It was very good living here until this happened. The help was perfect."

Another group of residents ate with Pribonic, who took down names and numbers of remaining residents who asked for additional help and guidance.

"As a community, we've taken something terrible and turned it into at least something palatable," he said. "It does not surprise me, but it's always amazing what happens in this community as far as volunteerism."
